Clorox discloses ingredients of cleaning products

Posted On 11 Feb 2011

(Photo: Clorox Greenworks) The safety of household cleansing products if one of the chief concerns of green consumers, since some off-the-shelf cleansers can pollute indoor air , triggering asthma attacks or worse, while making your own cleansers is often very simple. [Related: How to Make Your Own Cleansers] In New York, groups are pushing an old and forgotten law in an effort to get all companies to disclose the ingredients in their cleaning products. And a number of companies, old and new, are pushing greener cleaning products onto store shelves that, often, come will fully disclosed ingredient lists and simpler recipes than their more complex chemical cousins

What's Behind Chevrolet's $40 Million Clean Energy

Initiative?

Posted On 19 Nov 2010

On the same day as their initial public stock offering, Chevrolet made a major announcement that in essence proclaimed "we want to be your green car company." Following on the heels of the warm reception given to their 42 mpg Cruze Eco, and the long awaited Volt which was recently named Motor Trend and Automobile Magazine's Car of the Year, as well as winning Green Car of the Year honors at the LA Auto Show, the company announced a new Clean Energy Initiative aimed at communities, hoping to build on the momentum that the company seems to be gaining.

At Modest Needs, Small Gifts Add Up to Life-Changing Help

Posted On 19 Nov 2010

In this current economic climate, money is tight for many people, the unemployment rate is in the double digits, and more people fall under the poverty level than has been reported in more than 50 years. Many of those who escaped the most severe consequences of our economic crisis are walking a fine line between day-to-day financial security and ruin with the potential to be toppled by an unexpected expenditure. Any bump in the road: a car repair, a health issue not covered by insurance, utility bill spike, or raised rent could send them over the edge.

Band confirms dead eagle as 1 of Alaska's oldest

Posted On 12 Feb 2011

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A Kodiak Island bald eagle survived 25 years of Alaska hazards but met an unfortunate fate last month on the crossbar of a utility pole: electrocution. A band attached to its leg showed the bird to be the second-oldest bald eagle documented in Alaska and one of the oldest in the country

Coast Guard: Gulf cleanup should be cut back

Posted On 12 Feb 2011

NEW ORLEANS — The cleanup of oiled beaches along the Gulf of Mexico has reached a point where crews, heavy equipment and thorough scrubbing can cause more damage to the ecosystem than good, the Coast Guard said Friday. Birds, sea turtles, fish and other species are more likely to be harmed by an aggressive cleanup than by simply leaving remnants of oil and letting it slowly degrade, the Coast Guard said.
